

WORLD & NATION

Japanese internment camp survivors protest Ft. Sill migrant detention center

Organizer Mike Ishii, center, with Ft. Sill protesters including historian Tom Ikeda, Satsuki Ina, USC professor Duncan Williams and Paul Tomita. (Molly Hennessy-Fiske / Los Angeles Times)

By MOLLY HENNESSY-FISKE
HOUSTON BUREAU CHIEF

JUNE 22, 2019
5:24 PM

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

“We are here today to protest the repetition of history,” proclaimed camp survivor Satsuki Ina, 75, of San Francisco, one of about two dozen former internees and their descendants in attendance.

Met by uniformed military police, the protesters, some in their 80s, were told they did not have permission to congregate and might face arrest. “You need to move right now!” one of the officers shouted. “What don’t you understand? It’s English: Get out.”

But the survivors, carrying thousands of origami cranes as a symbol of solidarity, refused to leave until police from adjacent Lawton, Okla., arrived and let them speak. They then moved to a park where a crowd of about 200 was waiting.

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

Overwhelmed facilities

An influx of nearly 600,000 migrants at the southern border this year has led federal officials to open emergency detention centers.

● U.S. Border Patrol temporary holding areas

■ Department of Health and Human Services emergency lockups

Some temporary Border Patrol facilities have not yet opened. The Department of Health and Human Services has asked the military to help it house an additional 2,000 youths in undetermined locations.

Sources: Nextzen, OpenStreetMap

Graphics reporting by Molly Hennessy-Fiske

Paul Duginski / @latimesgraphics

(Los Angeles Times)

Ft. Sill has become a rallying point for Japanese Americans hoping to prevent migrant detention in what they call concentration camps, some built on the sites where they and their families were interned during World War II.

About 100,000 Japanese Americans

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

The Ft. Sill post has now been designated an emergency shelter and is due to house children who have crossed the border from Mexico unaccompanied by adults. The post was last used to house migrant children in 2014, when it took in 1,861.

SPONSORED CONTENT

Make Yourself a Gift to the World [Watch] ↗

By Equinox

Equinox believes that self-devotion can be a good thing

By law, the Border Patrol can hold such children for up to 72 hours and must then turn them over to Department of Health and Human Services officials, who place them in a network of 168 detention centers in 23 states.

Those lockups have filled, leading the agency to add a 2,400-bed facility in Homestead, Fla., as they have for the last two years. Officials plan to open the Ft. Sill lockup this summer, and a 1,600-bed facility at a former oilfield worker housing complex in Carrizo Springs, Texas, later this month, near the site of the World War II internment camp of Crystal City.

In all, federal officials are opening tents and emergency lockups for an influx of nearly 600,000 migrants on the southern border this year, mostly families and children unaccompanied by adults, many from Central America.

U.S. Customs and Border Protection has crammed 15,000 migrants into temporary holding areas designed for only 4,000 people. On Friday, Texas Gov. Greg Abbott announced he was sending 1,000 National Guard troops to the border, doubling the number deployed, to assist at temporary holding areas. The Border Patrol has asked Congress for emergency funding to care for migrants, and a $4.5-billion House proposal is scheduled for a vote in the coming week.

During the Obama administration, Oklahoma's Republican leaders opposed lockups such as Ft. Sill, but they are now defending them. Sens. James M. Inhofe and James Lankford joined Rep. Tom Cole, also of Oklahoma, to issue a joint statement calling the facility a necessary, temporary solution to the border crisis.

Lankford said in a separate statement last week that to liken the migrant detention centers to internment camps "is a false equivalency."

"What happened then is not what is happening now," the statement said. "... Every country now knows if you come into our country with a child, you will be released. It is our responsibility to ensure the security and safety of all the children coming into our country, and I have confidence that will be done properly at Fort Sill."

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

Founded in 1869, the post has hosted a relocation camp for Native Americans, a boarding school for Native children separated from their families, and an internment camp for 700 Japanese American men in 1942. Saturday's crowd included former students from the boarding school and descendants of Ft. Sill detainees.

Among those once interned at Ft. Sill was Kanesaburo Oshima, fatally shot by guards while scaling the post's fence. Ikeda, who interviewed Oshima's son, shared the story of Oshima — a 58-year-old businessman and father of 11 from Kona, Hawaii — with the group on Saturday.

“We need to be the allies for vulnerable communities today that Japanese Americans didn't have in 1942,” Ikeda said.

Paul Tomita and other internment camp survivors brought camp ID cards and other photos of themselves from when they were detained as children.

Tomita, 80, of Bellevue, Wash., was sent to a camp in Idaho when he was 3, and his family lived in a dusty tent there for about a year. He said Saturday that when he sees photographs of detained migrant children, he recognizes a sense of despair. “It's our responsibility to help,” he said.

Last week, Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) faced a backlash when she called migrant detention facilities concentration camps and refused to back down.

“We are calling these camps what they are because they fit squarely in an academic consensus and definition,” she tweeted.

Critics say the term applies only to the Nazi death camps where millions of Jews were killed. But some descendants of Holocaust survivors who gathered at Ft. Sill disagreed.

Mike Korenblit's parents survived a concentration camp in Poland. Now Korenblit, 67, and his wife, of Edmond, Okla., protest regularly outside their local Immigration and Customs Enforcement office. He wore a U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum T-shirt to Saturday's protest and defended using the term “concentration camps” for internment camps and migrant holding areas.

“They are the same kind of situation. Why aren't they identified as the same thing?” he said.

Karen Ishizuka, senior curator at Los Angeles' Japanese American National Museum, was forced in the 1990s to defend her use of the term for internment camps when she organized an exhibit called “America's Concentration Camps: Remembering the Japanese American Experience.”

“To call them anything else is to mitigate the enormity of the travesty,” she said before Saturday's protest.

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

people are imprisoned not because of any crime they have committed, but simply because of who they are,” the 1998 statement said.

Museum officials sent Ishizuka to Ft. Sill on Saturday and plan a second protest in front of the museum in Little Tokyo on Thursday.

“We all have the responsibility to stand up for justice,” she said.

molly.hennessy-fiske@latimes.com

@mollyhf

WORLD & NATION

Must-read stories from the L.A. Times

Get all the day's most vital news with our Today's Headlines newsletter, sent every weekday morning.

You may occasionally receive promotional content from the Los Angeles Times.

Molly Hennessy-Fiske

Twitter Instagram Email Facebook

Molly Hennessy-Fiske has been a staff writer since 2006 in Washington, Los Angeles, Texas and overseas. A graduate of Harvard College, she spent a year as Middle East bureau chief before returning as Houston bureau chief.

MORE FROM THE LOS ANGELES TIMES

FOOD

What's being stockpiled in America's 'pandemic pantries'? Oat milk

59 minutes ago

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

Bethlehem's storied Nativity Church closes amid virus fears

2 hours ago

WORLD & NATION

U.S. forces can be investigated for Afghanistan war crimes along with Taliban, world court rules

2 hours ago

WORLD & NATION

This 'gay, atheist, leftist' is taking on Poland's right-wing government — by running for president

March 5, 2020

Around the Web

Ads by Revcontent

Suzy Levian Diamonds

GILT

How Dogs Cry For Help: 3 Warning Signs Your Dog Is Crying For Help

DR. MARTY

Estee Lauder 5-Pc. All-Day Hydration Set

MACY'S

Heart Surgeon Boils Weight Loss Down to One Thing

GUNDRY MD

Oscar Pomegranate Ceramic Sculpture With Shiny Gold Finish By Curatedkravet

1STDIBS

Massachusetts Launches New Policy for Cars Used Less Than 50 Miles/day

EXPERTS IN MONEY

ADVERTISEMENT

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

LATEST WORLD-NATION

WORLD & NATION

What would a world without women look like? On March 9, Mexico may find out

March 5, 2020

WORLD & NATION

A Tibetan journey in the time of coronavirus

March 5, 2020

WORLD & NATION

World girds for months of trouble as virus pushes west

March 5, 2020

WORLD & NATION

Turkey deploying special forces to border amid migrant surge

March 5, 2020

WORLD & NATION

NASA worker charged in death of Maryland National Guardsman

March 5, 2020

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy.

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

SUBSCRIBE

Subscribe for unlimited access

Follow Us

Copyright © 2020, Los Angeles Times | Terms of Service | Privacy Policy | CA Notice of Collection | Do Not Sell My Info

The story begins in California
Try for $1 a week.

By continuing to use our site, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can learn more about how we use cookies by reviewing our Privacy Policy. Close

SUBSCRIBE